

Associate Professor Leanne Hodson

I obtained my PhD in human nutrition, from the University of Otago, New Zealand. In 2004, I received the Girdlers Health Research Council (New Zealand) career development fellowship, which provided the opportunity to work at the University of Oxford work with Professors Keith Frayn and Fredrik Karpe, world leaders in human metabolism.

I was awarded British Heart Foundation Intermediate Basic Science Research Fellowship in 2011 and become an Associate Professor Diabetes and Metabolism in 2014 and then in 2015 I received a British Heart Foundation Senior Basic Science Research Fellowship.
